ACADEMIC LIFE

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL SERVANT

ADVOCATE & ADVISER

RELATIONSHIP WITH SPAIN

Appendices: I, II, III

Brazilian-born physician, ALEXANDRE KALACHE has been a key protagonist in the science and policy of POPULATION AGEING for the past four decades. He was one of the very earliest academics to articulate the global significance of the demographic transition. He was one of the first to recognise that the ageing of populations was not limited to developed countries, but in fact was a near universal phenomenon. He accurately foresaw that ageing would occur in much of the developing world – at a faster rate and involve far greater numbers, than the rich world. (Currently, 66% of the world's older people live in developing countries and this is expected to increase to more than 80% by the year 2050). He has devoted his working life to raising the awareness of both the potential dividends and the challenges of population ageing and to develop innovative frameworks that address the issue on a global scale.

As an academic, at the Universities of Oxford and London: 1975-1995;

as an international civil servant, (WHO Director: 1995-2008); and as an advocate/adviser, directing and guiding non-governmental, inter-governmental & governmental bodies: 2008-present;

Professor Kalache has driven a radical rethinking of the paradigm of ageing. He has broadened global social policy on ageing beyond a narrow focus on health (and the elderly) to one that embraces the full range of social and environmental determinants across the entirety of the life-course.

ACADEMIC LIFE

Following his medical school graduation (Federal University of Rio de Janeiro, 1970) and a period of clinical research and practice in Brazil, Dr Kalache relocated to the UK to be closer to the then world centre of community medicine and to complete his MSc (1977; with Distinction) and PhD (1993) at the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (LSHTM), University of London, the pre-eminent school of public health in the UK. In 1978 he was awarded membership of the UK Royal College of Physicians, Faculty of Community Medicine (now Faculty of Public Health) and subsequently made fellow in 1984. From 1977-1984 Professor Kalache held positions of Lecturer and Senior Research Fellow at Oxford University (Green College) under the mentorship of Professor Sir Richard Doll (considered to be the leading epidemiologist of the 20th century) and Professor Martin Vessey. In 1984 Kalache founded and took up the directorship of the Public Health Implications of Ageing Programme at the University of London (initially called the Epidemiology of Ageing unit). A main purpose was to generate a global critical mass of researchers on the epidemiology of ageing. Over the next decade, he replicated his well subscribed UK courses throughout the world (Argentina, Brazil, Chile, China, Cuba, Hong-Kong, Jamaica, Malaysia, Philippines, Portugal, India, Spain, Sweden, South Africa and the USA - in many instances, at multiple locations in the same country) to establish a worldwide network of over a thousand researchers. Many of the alumni have since become the leading national and international voices in the field of population ageing. Also during this time at the University of London, Professor Kalache created and coordinated the first-ever Master of Science (MSc) in Health Promotion in the world (1990) – a degree course that continues to be offered by the institution.

INTERNATIONAL CIVIL SERVANT

Dr Kalache transferred his expertise in the epidemiology of ageing and health promotion to the World Health Organization (WHO) when he assumed responsibility for that body's global programme on ageing in 1995. He additionally brought to WHO a global constituency of very energised researchers – many of whom were now entering the ranks of national policy-makers. Dr Kalache inherited a programme at WHO that, in both name and substance, was almost entirely disease-orientated and focused purely on the aged, with little regard to the process of ageing. Of course, disease is important but health, as declared in the WHO founding document, is “not simply the absence of disease”. From the very beginning of his role as WHO Director, Kalache stressed the health promotion mantra that “health is created and lived by people within the settings of their everyday lives; where they learn, work, play and love”. Over the next twelve years he fully incorporated the life-course component to WHO policy on ageing and extended the science of health promotion to two of the defining themes of our time – population ageing and urbanisation. Despite few financial resources, the global programme on ageing under Dr Kalache utilised the unique convocation powers of WHO and his own persuasive skills to further collaborations and to re-set the thinking and policy directions on population ageing on a global scale.

Central to the change in ideology at WHO was the policy document Active Ageing: a Policy Framework launched by Kalache at the UN World Assembly on Ageing in Madrid 2002. The document defined active ageing as “the process of optimising opportunities for health, participation and security in order to enhance quality of life as people age”. (Life-long learning, or continuing education throughout the life-course, was highlighted as a fourth pillar at an international conference hosted by the Andalusian Government in Seville in 2010).

Since its release, the WHO publication has informed policy development in a still-expanding number of countries and states; that include, among others, Spain; Portugal; Sweden; UK; Singapore; Australia; New Zealand; USA; Canada; Costa Rica; Chile; and Brazil. As recently as December 2017, the Federation of Spanish Municipalities & Provinces (FEMP) reconfirmed the Active Ageing Policy Framework as the basis for all policies on ageing for all municipalities within Spain. At the inter-governmental level, the European Commission declared 2012 to be the European Year of Active Ageing and Solidarity between Generations. The United Nations Economic Commission for Europe, jointly with the European Commission, has developed an Active Ageing Index consisting of 22 indicators to monitor its progress in Europe. Both as a concept and as a policy road map, Active Ageing continues to inspire and to evolve. The framework was comprehensively revised and expanded by the publication, Active Ageing: a Policy Framework in Response to the Longevity Revolution (ILC-Brazil), launched at the United Nations in New York in 2015.

After the release of the WHO document, Dr Kalache soon recognised the need to translate the new theory of Active Ageing into further practice. The ambition was consolidated by the challenge posed by the United Nations to adopt a bottom-up approach to the implementation of the Madrid International Plan of Action on Ageing (2002). The global conversation on ageing was entering a new phase in this period. Researchers around the world were beginning to approach ageing more contextually, including within the urban frame. There was a growing realisation that the bulk of humanity would soon be urban dwellers and that the number of older people in the world, already out numbering children below the age of five, by 2050 would outnumber those under fifteen years. Keynoting at the Congress of the International Association of Geriatrics and Gerontology (IAGG) in Rio de Janeiro in 2005 provided the perfect stage for Dr Kalache to propose the establishment of a formal project on Age-friendly Cities on a global scale. By August 2006, WHO was coordinating the qualitative research that was being conducted in parallel in 33 cities that represented various urban realities – from mega-cities such as Tokyo; New Delhi; Mexico City; and London; to mid-sized cities such as La Plata; Geneva; and Kingston; to small cities such as Melville (Australia); Ponce (Puerto Rico); and Sherbrooke (Canada). Closely informed by the Active Ageing thinking and the voices of older persons themselves, Dr Kalache launched Global Age-friendly Cities: a Guide in 2007. The publication established a proactive response to the two converging global trends shaping the 21st century – population ageing and urbanisation – and laid the groundwork for a worldwide movement that continues to expand exponentially. There are currently more than 850 official WHO-designated Age-friendly Cities, covering an estimated population of 240 million people worldwide, with a far greater number using the methodologies without formal accreditation.

ADVOCATE & ADVISER

Dr Kalache is currently the Co-President of the International Longevity Centres - Global Alliance (ILC-GA), a sixteen-country consortium of think tanks on ageing policy, with consultative status to the United Nations, headquartered at Columbia University in New York. In his second elected term, he shares the Presidency with Dr Mary Anne Tsao (ILC- Singapore). In his first term he was joint President with Baroness Sally Greengross (ILC-UK). He is additionally President of the International Longevity Centre – Brazil (ILC-BR) which he founded in his birth city of Rio de Janeiro in 2012.

In 2008 he relocated from Geneva to New York City where he took up the role of Senior Advisor to the President at the New York Academy of Medicine (NYAM) and advised on the implementation of Mayor Bloomberg's Age-friendly New York City project. Additionally, Kalache took on an advisory role with Spain's Matia Foundation to develop the priorities on ageing for the Basque Region.

In 2011 Dr Kalache was employed as Thinker-in-Residence by the Premier (State Governor) of South Australia (SA). His residency brought together the state government; local government; the three SA universities; all key agencies in the community ageing sector; and older people themselves; to shape the strategic vision on ageing for the State of South Australia. His mentorship of ageing policies in Australia is on-going and has grown to include other States.

Dr Kalache works strenuously to flag the importance of population ageing for all sectors of society and to actualise Active Ageing and Age-friendly approaches throughout the world. He stresses that age-friendly environments are intrinsically friendly to all ages but the defined constituency of older persons must be kept at the core – that the specificity of this particular population group is essential to instruct, nurture and defend its on-going development.

In addition to age-friendly Cities and States, Dr Kalache instigates and facilitates projects worldwide on age-friendly primary health-care, age-friendly hospitals, age-friendly universities, age-friendly banking and age-friendly tourism among others. There is a strong focus in his work on fostering a culture of care, strengthening citizenship/ human rights and building resilience (at the individual, the community and the systems levels) through life-long learning and inclusive design.

RELATIONSHIP WITH SPAIN

Dr Alexandre Kalache has a more than a three decade-long relationship with Spain. In 1986, the Dean of the London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine (LSHTM), designated Kalache to be the interface between LSHTM, the “mother of all schools of public health” and the newly-created Andalusian School of Public Health (EASP) in Granada. Tasked with establishing an entirely new national health service and simultaneously undergoing entry into the European Union, Spanish planners recognised that building capacity on public health policy was essential. Propelled by an immediate fascination for the country and facilitated by his fluency in Spanish, Kalache soon established firm relationships with the key national academic research and teaching institutions.

Over the next nine years (until his appointment as WHO Director) he adapted his London-based courses on the epidemiology of older age; the public health implications of ageing; and health promotion; into short courses (typically 2-3 weeks) in Seville, Valencia, Alicante, Barcelona, Madrid, Pamplona, Zaragoza, Salamanca - in addition to Granada. Many of the alumni progressed to notable academic and/or public office careers and further advanced his concepts and policy approaches to population ageing.

Dr Kalache was subsequently appointed Honorary Member of the Spanish Society of Geriatrics and Gerontology (SEGG) and has been a regular and active participant in the activities of that Association over the decades – most recently providing the keynote speech at the 2016 Congress in Seville. He was also appointed honorary member of the Spanish Association for the Scientific Study of Healthy Ageing (AECES).

IMERSO was quick to embrace Kalache's signature 2002 initiative at WHO, the Active Ageing Policy Framework, which was launched at the United Nation's World Assembly on Ageing in Madrid. IMERSO translated the framework into Spanish which was then disseminated nationally through the SEGG network and its principle scientific publication. The extent to which the Active Ageing philosophy has permeated Spanish social policy was evident at the December 2017 meeting of the Spanish Federation of Municipalities and Provinces (FEMP) in Madrid. The four pillars of Active Ageing form the foundation to all the work on ageing being undertaken across the country.

In 2009 Kalache was appointed consultant to the Matia Foundation. His formal relationship ended in 2012 but he continues to work with them on an informal basis. In 2011, he was appointed to the Advisory Board of EASP and took on a role as Associate Professor. In 2010, Dr Kalache was appointed President of the jury for the Premio Principe de Viana de Atencion a la Dependencia and took a central role in the award ceremony hosted by the then HRH Prince Felipe and Dona Leticia.

Dr Kalache has been regularly invited to contribute, at both public and private sector forums in Spain, over the past three decades. Events in Spain in the last 24 months include a speaking tour that covered Santiago de Compostela, Vigo, Ourense, San Sebastian and Pamplona; addressing the Madrid City Council and audiences in Barcelona, Seville and Granada; and keynoting at conferences in Valencia, Seville, Albacete and Vitoria. He has enormous familiarity and affection for Spain – as evidenced by the fact that he has had a home in Granada since 1989.
